ALL HOLLAND GOING ABOUT ON SKATES

Not for Years Has the Ice Been So Firm and So Smooth-Famous Races Have Taken Place.

The Hague, Netherlands, March 10-Holland is at the moment one big skating rink. From sovereign to humblest peasant, from aged grandmother and grandfather to the tiniest toddlers, the nation is gliding serenely, merrily along on skates.

In striking contrast with the last three or four mild winters, a most intense and continuous cold spell has set in, and despite brilliant sunshine from a clear sky every lake and canal in the land of canals is now frozen as hard as the cobbled streets. Even the big North Sea canal leading from the sea to the port of Amsterdam is only being kept open by icebreakers. Many of the is lands are islands no longer, and travelers passing to and fro, instead of booktheir steamboat passages, buckle on their skates. The mail is even being conveyed to the famous island of Marken, on the Zuyder Zee, by the same means. One can go from the Hague to Amsterdam, to Rotterdam, to practically any part of the country on skates. The countryside, ordinarily so deserted and quiet, on the sabbath in particular is dotted everywhere with fleeting Hollanders of all ages; and in the towns themselves he who will need go no farther than the canal just outside his door to indulge in the pastime.

The lakes outside the royal house in the wood at the Hague resemble nothing so much as a fair, with their stalls and seats and barrows and endless kaleidoscopic crowd whirling up and down and in and out, in ones, twos, three and fours, sometimes with joined hands, sometimes in chain fashion. On the big rink of the lee club nearby may be eccasionally seen the queen herself, on skates among dier was horrified a day or two ago to gade started off at fixed intervals from accidentally overturned.

Down in the children's corner at the Princess Juliana. Mounted on Frisian skates, she glides and shuffles and slips among the other small "krabbelaars" ("scratchers" or "scrapers") as the begin-ners are dubbed. Glowing with health Queen Wilhelmina occasionally coming watch her progress. A day or two ago the royal family went up to see and join in the skating in the northern provnce of Friesland, so famed for the sport, the little princess beloing to present the prizes awarded at Leeuwarden and bewent to join the Frisian children on the It is in the Friesland that the famous

The mobilized troops of Holland have been carrying out various exercises and competitions on skates, for the army authorities consider it in the country's interest that the men shall be thorroughly at home on the ice. The problem of Holland's defense normally based, Take When Bilious, Headachy, for Colds, as it is, on the method of flooding a certain protective zone known as the new water line, would be entirely transformed should invasion occur during such a frost spell as the present. The Netherlands have to this day not forgotten their forefathers' dismay when their water gates were in the year 1795 thrown open to the invading French army by such another frost, which enabled the enemy to easily cross the rivers and other water barriers on which Holland had been counting. Hence the present exercises being carried out on the ice, here and there under the eye of the queen herself (also mounted on skates), and for which her majesty has offered
